CAPE MAY — The city of Cape May is in the midst of an effort to convince the regional school funding formula to recognize its status as a vacation community. According to the formula, the city is currently assessed at 37.5 percent, while accounting for just 5 percent of the students.

Cape May is like some other New Jersey Municipalities, such as Cape May and Somers Point, not being classified as a school district. According to the formula, this reduces the amount of taxes they pay to school districts. On the other hand, some communities, such as North Haledon, have been dealing with similar issues in reducing their share of regional school taxes.

For nearly two decades, North Haledon had sought to change the formula to reduce the amount of taxes it paid to the Manchester Regional School District, claiming residents were paying an unfair per pupil cost as compared to the neighboring communities of Haledon and Prospect Park.

“Restrooms are urgent for some restrooms,” he said. “We’re trying to move this on an expedited manner,” MacLeod said.

In May, the city purchased the lot for $770,000. The property had been in the works for more than two decades. In 2004, Cape May bought the property for $650,000. The city wanted to build a condominium on the lot but the sale fell through. In 2004, the city purchased the property for $350,000.
