Zack Mullock's mind in his second run for City Council.

"I was born and raised in Cape May," Mullock said. "I have lived in a bed and breakfast in the center of the city's historic district and I know this city."

"I would be determined to do whatever it takes to save the City of Cape May and keep it for the people," he said.

Mullock’s vision for Cape May has 14 components. His primary vision is to create a municipal marina, running from the Cornish Yacht Club on the Delaware Avenue to the point in the harbor, which he said are boundaries in the way the bay water is entered.

"We could add events such as fishing tournaments from the boat," he said.

The marina would make a substantial contribution to the city's tourism and economic development.

The city’s budgetary deficit and bankruptcies have been criticized in the past by Mullock. He said he would end up with a balanced budget and a well-run city with no radicals in it.

"I believe Cape May is a small town charm that people from all over the world are coming to," he said. "We would do all the things to keep it in a small town, but make it a major city."

Mullock said he would work with the redevelopment district to address a possible redevelopment plan.

"There are a lot of things that the redevelopment district can do to make the city a major center," he said. "We would do a lot of things to keep the city out of debt and make it a major center."
