CMBO to hold new Spring Watch bird count in March

By JACK FICHTER

Cape May Star and Wave

CAPE MAY POINT — The Cape May Point Bird Count, which is held by the Cape May Point Bird Observatory (CMBO), will be held on March 13-14.

The Bird Count is the nation’s oldest bird count, going back to 1920. The CMBO has been conducting the bird count for over 90 years.

The Bird Count is open to the public, and volunteers are always needed. Interested volunteers can contact the CMBO by calling (609) 884-8070.

The CMBO is a nonprofit, scientific research and education organization that conducts research on birds and their habitats. The CMBO is located at Cape May Point, which is a National Wildlife Refuge.

The CMBO is also home to the Cape May Point Bird Observatory, which is a research facility that studies bird behavior and ecology.

The Bird Count is held every year in March, and it is a chance for birders to see how many birds are present in the Cape May area.

The Bird Count is open to the public, and volunteers are always needed. Interested volunteers can contact the CMBO by calling (609) 884-8070.

The CMBO is a nonprofit, scientific research and education organization that conducts research on birds and their habitats. The CMBO is located at Cape May Point, which is a National Wildlife Refuge.

The CMBO is also home to the Cape May Point Bird Observatory, which is a research facility that studies bird behavior and ecology.