Township drops out but concerts to continue at ferry terminal

BY JACK FICHTER
Cape May Star and Wave

CAPE MAY — The city is seeking a volunteer harbormaster to deal with a continuing problem of boats being abandoned at the ferry terminal.

Mayor Zack Mullock said the city has a 3-year plan to deal with the problem. He said the city’s harbor was never abandoned boats. He added that the city wants to address the matter now and said he hopes for the position to be filled by June 1.

“It’s our understanding that a large boat can sink, because that’s what happened in the past,” Wynn said. “We want to make sure that we have a safe and orderly harbor for our citizens.”

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.

The harbormaster would work with the city manager and police department and could communicate with the State Police. He said it was a paid position.

City solicitor Chris Gillin-Schwartz said the position would be “one tick above a police department.”

“You’re still having enforcement of the appropriate officials—code enforcement, the police department, State Police, the Marine Services Bureau,” he said.

He said the position would be similar to the one held by the Historic Preservation Commission and the city’s compliance officer. He said the powers of the harbormaster would be limited, essentially a safety and security position.