CAPE MAY — Millennials are the entire age range. The generation that makes up millennials is so diverse that one statement does not encompass them. Cape May has a multiple jobs to survive. Upon closer examination, Cape May has a well-established millennial community living and working in town.

"Working here is tough because I'm a writer," Jennifer Post said. "I also consider job hunting a full-time job. We work as freelance writers and have a part-time job on the Willow Creek Winery. We've visited relatives in Cape May before ultimately buying a house. I want to stay for college and then move back in with my parents after I graduate from Rowan," Post said. "Millennials love to hang out in Cape May, but we're working and making ends meet to support our lives. We're a group of all age ranges who have their families living in Cape May. We break the mold of entitlement, while others have called them narcissistic, lazy and entitled. The county tourism office found that millennials sought to connect with people. They are more likely to say yes to something rather than say no. They are also more likely to try new things. Millennials tend to travel more than other age groups, and they are also more likely to try new things. Millennials are also more likely to try new things.
