The New Jersey Division of Environmental Protection, in conjunction with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, offered the first opportunity to look at all of the potential environmental impacts. Officials said they will need to manage their own expectations for a project estimated to cost at least $15 billion with construction beginning for almost a decade.

The proposal incorporates multiple projects to reduce storm surge barriers across Great Egg Harbor Inlet. The project will include Sea Isle City and Longport, Manasquan Inlet and Sea Girt, and Point Pleasant Beach. The project is approved for fiscal year 2020.
