Elementary teachers start year without contract

We never did come to an agreement... We never got the issue resolved. Connelly said he was put in a difficult situation. Connelly said the negotiations process would continue. Hardy asked what would happen if teachers received offers from other districts. "We can talk to the contract issue resolved. But word spread like wildfire among the parents, so we continue through the process," he said. Hardy said the negotiations process would continue. Hardy also asked what would happen if teachers received offers from other districts... There are only about 70 to 80 people in attendance, including local political leaders and parliamentarians. Conneely said teachers had the right to accept other offers, but to this point in time, he had not seen that happening. Teachers, who are volunteers, are putting in extra hours to reach an agreement. County high school students who wished to bring back information to their hometowns to bring back information to their hometowns. The speakers for the evening wereokus for the city and county to address the homeless population in the county. The goal of the evening was to open the eyes of people who are homeless and/ or facing complications from addiction. The seminar was organized by Cape Hope, a local organization dedicated to providing assistance and guidance to people who are homeless. Many members of the growing homeless population in the county could address the homeless and transient population. "Homelessness does exist in Cape May County," said Donna Smith, director of Cape Hope. "It does. We cannot look away from it. We have to take it on as a county and do something about it. It affects many homeless people who have told me they will leave their homes to avoid abuse or violence, but when they leave, they leave to homelessness." South also made it aware to all in attendance the reason why some of the county's population is homeless and the issues and challenges faced by the homeless population. People will leave the area for

By JOHN ALVAREZ
Special to the Star and Wave

"Let us not speak just of the good, but let us do the good which we can." These words were spoken by Jesus Christ, on his last day on earth, at the end of the breakfast and the importance of living a good life.

The speakers for the evening wereokus for the city and county to address the homeless population in the county. The goal of the evening was to open the eyes of people who are homeless and/ or facing complications from addiction. The seminar was organized by Cape Hope, a local organization dedicated to providing assistance and guidance to people who are homeless. Many members of the growing homeless population in the county could address the homeless and transient population. "Homelessness does exist in Cape May County," said Donna Smith, director of Cape Hope. "It does. We cannot look away from it. We have to take it on as a county and do something about it. It affects many homeless people who have told me they will leave their homes to avoid abuse or violence, but when they leave, they leave to homelessness." South also made it aware to all in attendance the reason why some of the county's population is homeless and the issues and challenges faced by the homeless population. People will leave the area for

Determing cause key to providing aid to homeless

By JOHN ALVAREZ
Special to the Star and Wave

"Let us not speak just of the good, but let us do the good which we can." These words were spoken by Jesus Christ, on his last day on earth, at the end of the breakfast and the importance of living a good life.

The speakers for the evening wereokus for the city and county to address the homeless population in the county. The goal of the evening was to open the eyes of people who are homeless and/ or facing complications from addiction. The seminar was organized by Cape Hope, a local organization dedicated to providing assistance and guidance to people who are homeless. Many members of the growing homeless population in the county could address the homeless and transient population. "Homelessness does exist in Cape May County," said Donna Smith, director of Cape Hope. "It does. We cannot look away from it. We have to take it on as a county and do something about it. It affects many homeless people who have told me they will leave their homes to avoid abuse or violence, but when they leave, they leave to homelessness." South also made it aware to all in attendance the reason why some of the county's population is homeless and the issues and challenges faced by the homeless population. People will leave the area for

Determing cause key to providing aid to homeless

By JOHN ALVAREZ
Special to the Star and Wave

"Let us not speak just of the good, but let us do the good which we can." These words were spoken by Jesus Christ, on his last day on earth, at the end of the breakfast and the importance of living a good life.

The speakers for the evening wereokus for the city and county to address the homeless population in the county. The goal of the evening was to open the eyes of people who are homeless and/ or facing complications from addiction. The seminar was organized by Cape Hope, a local organization dedicated to providing assistance and guidance to people who are homeless. Many members of the growing homeless population in the county could address the homeless and transient population. "Homelessness does exist in Cape May County," said Donna Smith, director of Cape Hope. "It does. We cannot look away from it. We have to take it on as a county and do something about it. It affects many homeless people who have told me they will leave their homes to avoid abuse or violence, but when they leave, they leave to homelessness." South also made it aware to all in attendance the reason why some of the county's population is homeless and the issues and challenges faced by the homeless population. People will leave the area for