Beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point

By JACK FICHTER
Cape May Star and Wave

CAPE MAY POINT — A Beach Corps of Engineers replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay.

Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proj-

The beach renourish- ment takes place every four years, she said. It has been worked on by the DEP and the Army Corps for 12 years.

“This is the first time in- stead of developing from the- ree beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point- er’s beach replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay. Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proje-

Beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point

By JACK FICHTER
Cape May Star and Wave

CAPE MAY POINT — A Beach Corps of Engineers replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay.

Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proj-

The beach renourish- ment takes place every four years, she said. It has been worked on by the DEP and the Army Corps for 12 years.

“This is the first time in- stead of developing from the- ree beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point- er’s beach replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay. Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proje-

Beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point

By JACK FICHTER
Cape May Star and Wave

CAPE MAY POINT — A Beach Corps of Engineers replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay.

Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proj-

The beach renourish- ment takes place every four years, she said. It has been worked on by the DEP and the Army Corps for 12 years.

“This is the first time in- stead of developing from the- ree beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point- er’s beach replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay. Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proje-

Beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point

By JACK FICHTER
Cape May Star and Wave

CAPE MAY POINT — A Beach Corps of Engineers replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay.

Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proj-

The beach renourish- ment takes place every four years, she said. It has been worked on by the DEP and the Army Corps for 12 years.

“This is the first time in- stead of developing from the- ree beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point- er’s beach replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay. Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proje-

Beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point

By JACK FICHTER
Cape May Star and Wave

CAPE MAY POINT — A Beach Corps of Engineers replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay.

Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proj-

The beach renourish- ment takes place every four years, she said. It has been worked on by the DEP and the Army Corps for 12 years.

“This is the first time in- stead of developing from the- ree beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point- er’s beach replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay. Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proje-

Beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point

By JACK FICHTER
Cape May Star and Wave

CAPE MAY POINT — A Beach Corps of Engineers replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay.

Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proj-

The beach renourish- ment takes place every four years, she said. It has been worked on by the DEP and the Army Corps for 12 years.

“This is the first time in- stead of developing from the- ree beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point- er’s beach replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay. Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proje-

Beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point

By JACK FICHTER
Cape May Star and Wave

CAPE MAY POINT — A Beach Corps of Engineers replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay.

Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proj-

The beach renourish- ment takes place every four years, she said. It has been worked on by the DEP and the Army Corps for 12 years.

“This is the first time in- stead of developing from the- ree beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point- er’s beach replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay. Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proje-

Beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point

By JACK FICHTER
Cape May Star and Wave

CAPE MAY POINT — A Beach Corps of Engineers replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay.

Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proj-

The beach renourish- ment takes place every four years, she said. It has been worked on by the DEP and the Army Corps for 12 years.

“This is the first time in- stead of developing from the- ree beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point- er’s beach replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay. Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proje-

Beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point

By JACK FICHTER
Cape May Star and Wave

CAPE MAY POINT — A Beach Corps of Engineers replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay.

Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proj-

The beach renourish- ment takes place every four years, she said. It has been worked on by the DEP and the Army Corps for 12 years.

“This is the first time in- stead of developing from the- ree beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point- er’s beach replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay. Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proje-

Beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point

By JACK FICHTER
Cape May Star and Wave

CAPE MAY POINT — A Beach Corps of Engineers replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay.

Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proj-

The beach renourish- ment takes place every four years, she said. It has been worked on by the DEP and the Army Corps for 12 years.

“This is the first time in- stead of developing from the- ree beach replenishment under way in Cape May, Point- er’s beach replenishment project was scheduled to begin this week using and moving sand trucked in from Delaware Bay. Deputy Mayor Anita van-Heeswyk said she met last week with representatives of the Army Corps, state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), the Nature Conservancy, city of Cape May and the contractor for the proje-