Eagle project beautifies Wilbraham Park

By不准 FICTITI
CAPE May Star and Wave

CAPE May City Council has changed the rules regarding special events in hopes of recouping some of the money the city spends to provide first aid, security and cleanup. The new ordinance was approved during its meeting April 5.

Organizers of special events such as races, walkathons, fairs and festivals held on public grounds now must obtain a permit. The ordinance also requires any events that are likely to require emergency resources from the police and fire departments, public works and emergency medical services, for which the organizers now will be responsible. The ordinance does not apply to small gatherings on public property that do not substantially affect other members of the public, hikers, pedestrians or vehicles. It requires the expenditure of city resources. Not only does it apply to Convention Hall events, but it is also aimed at private groups that want to make use of the city’s resources. The city spent $3,460 for security and cleanup. There are rules regarding special events in hopes of recouping some of the money the city spends to provide first aid, security and cleanup. The new ordinance was approved during its meeting April 5.

Organizers of special events such as races, walkathons, fairs and festivals held on public grounds now must obtain a permit. The ordinance also requires any events that are likely to require emergency resources from the police and fire departments, public works and emergency medical services, for which the organizers now will be responsible. The ordinance does not apply to small gatherings on public property that do not substantially affect other members of the public, hikers, pedestrians or vehicles. It requires the expenditure of city resources. Not only does it apply to Convention Hall events, but it is also aimed at private groups that want to make use of the city’s resources. The city spent $3,460 for security and cleanup. There are rules regarding special events in hopes of recouping some of the money the city spends to provide first aid, security and cleanup. The new ordinance was approved during its meeting April 5.

Organizers of special events such as races, walkathons, fairs and festivals held on public grounds now must obtain a permit. The ordinance also requires any events that are likely to require emergency resources from the police and fire departments, public works and emergency medical services, for which the organizers now will be responsible. The ordinance does not apply to small gatherings on public property that do not substantially affect other members of the public, hikers, pedestrians or vehicles. It requires the expenditure of city resources. Not only does it apply to Convention Hall events, but it is also aimed at private groups that want to make use of the city’s resources. The city spent $3,460 for security and cleanup. There are rules regarding special events in hopes of recouping some of the money the city spends to provide first aid, security and cleanup. The new ordinance was approved during its meeting April 5.

Organizers of special events such as races, walkathons, fairs and festivals held on public grounds now must obtain a permit. The ordinance also requires any events that are likely to require emergency resources from the police and fire departments, public works and emergency medical services, for which the organizers now will be responsible. The ordinance does not apply to small gatherings on public property that do not substantially affect other members of the public, hikers, pedestrians or vehicles. It requires the expenditure of city resources. Not only does it apply to Convention Hall events, but it is also aimed at private groups that want to make use of the city’s resources. The city spent $3,460 for security and cleanup. There are rules regarding special events in hopes of recouping some of the money the city spends to provide first aid, security and cleanup. The new ordinance was approved during its meeting April 5.

Organizers of special events such as races, walkathons, fairs and festivals held on public grounds now must obtain a permit. The ordinance also requires any events that are likely to require emergency resources from the police and fire departments, public works and emergency medical services, for which the organizers now will be responsible. The ordinance does not apply to small gatherings on public property that do not substantially affect other members of the public, hikers, pedestrians or vehicles. It requires the expenditure of city resources. Not only does it apply to Convention Hall events, but it is also aimed at private groups that want to make use of the city’s resources. The city spent $3,460 for security and cleanup. There are rules regarding special events in hopes of recouping some of the money the city spends to provide first aid, security and cleanup. The new ordinance was approved during its meeting April 5.