vice at 9:30 a.m. Sunday, to celebrate his first service at the parish. He is scheduled to be installed as bishop of the diocese of Maine in August.

The ordination of Bishop Tabone brings the number of bishops in the New England diocese to six. The diocese is one of nine in the Episcopal Church in the United States, with the others being New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont, and the Diocese of the Virgin Islands and Florida.

Bishop Tabone is the first bishop of the diocese of Maine. His installation was held at the Cathedral of St. Paul in Portland, Maine. He was consecrated by Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, Michael Curry, with Presiding Bishop of the Diocese of Maine, Mark E. J. Yaconelli, serving as co-consecrator.

The ordination of Bishop Tabone was a significant moment for the Episcopal Church in the United States, as it represents a new chapter in the history of the diocese of Maine.

West Cape delays vote on expanding historic district

The Rea family, owners of Rea's Farm, object to their farm barn being selected as a contributing structure to the expanded historic district in West Cape May. "We feel we have the right to do with our land what we want," Diane Rea said.

The borough of West Cape May is proposing to add 42 homes and a farm to its historic district, which currently includes about 150 contributing structures. The Rea family contends that their farm barn, a historic building on Stevens Street, should not be included.

"We feel we have the right to do with our land what we want," Diane Rea said. "We do not want the farm barn put in a historic district."

The Rea family is one of several owners of properties that have been identified by the borough as potential contributors to the historic district. The Reas have been told that they may need to make changes to the building to meet the standards of the historic district.
