Cape May, NJ — Jessica Manfre, who founded a food bank at Training Center Cape May (TRACEN) during the partial government shutdown, was honored for her volunteer service "above and beyond expectations" by the city at a town hall meeting May 1.

Deputy Mayor Patricia Handricke cited from the city ordinance passed last October about the impact of the partial government shutdown.

"Some of us understood our roles in crisis situations in other ways, but at least one person at TRACEN was literally fighting the shutdown," she said.

Handricke said she conceived a way to help TRACEN "because, in that case, we could all get involved and offer help." "So I volunteered," she said.

"We need to stay focused," she said. "So we did that all over, we could all get involved and offer help." "So I volunteered," she said.

"But that's what the military community does," said Deputy Mayor Patricia Handricke. "Whatever, about, about, or almost unbelievable."

"So we need to stay focused," she said. "So we did that all over, we could all get involved and offer help." "So I volunteered," she said.
