The Lower Township Historic Preservation Commission is concerned that restoration work on the Cape May Beach Patrol Station, which was staffed at the Judge Nathaniel Foster House, is moving too fast. The house, which was built in 1780, has been the site of several altercations with the township over the past three years, including a dispute over the price of the property and a conflict over the amount of work being done. The property was sold to the county in 2020, and the new owner, the Cape May Beach Patrol, has been working on the property ever since. The house is currently under renovation, and the commission is concerned that the work is moving too quickly. The commission has asked the county to slow down the work, and they are considering legal action if the work continues at the current pace.
