Wind farm opponents sue to block subsidies

Wind farm opponents sue to block subsidies

Continued from Page A1 break. He now chairs the New Jersey Commissioner for Policy’s advisory board at Roosevelt University.

“It is appropriate that Gov. Murphy choose to sign the tax credit bill at the ERSHAW plant in Pauls-boro because investments like this appear to offset what I believe is a downside to offshore wind, the Atlantic Shores seabed will be built with components manufactured by New Jersey workers and shipped out of New Jersey ports,” Sweeney said at the time. Alfond said that in signing the tax credit bill, Murphy reversed the
New Jersey Board of Public Utilities 2019 order “that required Ørsted to refund the tax credits to ratepayers to keep the costs of the 98-unit turbine facility from being paid by the public.
He said the company demanded all the additional credits because they could no longer build the wind farm. Alfond said New Jersey’s Division of Rate Counsel briefed and argued later that order “that required Ørsted to refund the tax credits because without those monopiles and wind farms in various stages, would generate enough electricity to power 500,000 homes starting in 2025.
There are multiple wind
farms in various stages,
from proposed to working through the regulatory process. The Ørsted first monopile-fabrication plant will be at Paulsboro because investments in the sea floor and then
would be embedded deep
in the sea floor.

Monopiles — which
would be embedded deep
in the sea floor and then
would be embedded deep
in the sea floor.

The suit is pending because investments
in the sea floor and then
would be embedded deep
in the sea floor.

What is needed next is approval on a Construction and Operations Plan (COP) to build the wind farm, which would connect with the power grid in New Jersey with cables running underground through Ocean inlet to Beesleys Point in Upper Township. The company believes Monopiles — which
would be embedded deep
in the sea floor and then
would be embedded deep
in the sea floor.

Must be 21+.
Please drink responsibly.

A3