President Barack Obama in his prepared remarks of the commemoration of D-Day this June 6, 2014, singled out and mentioned one of the "Greatest Generation" veterans that fought during the D-Day invasion to be a hero. He stated, "Don't worry, Harry, the hamburger would do fine. And what's more American than a hamburger for lunch today — he helped liberate this coast, after all."

Obama went on to recount, "Harry came ashore at Utah Beach on D-Day. And now that he’s back home — he helped liberate this coast, after all — he’s here to commemorate the 70th anniversary of the D-Day invasion."

The details of the invasion of Normandy in 1944, as he spoke about the personal sacrifices of Kulkowitz, are provided in the article. The story of Harry Kulkowitz is more than a hero, he is an icon. According to U.S. Coast Guard Petty Officer Chris Fonesca, "All signs point to a busy summer at the shore. Optimistic outlook may lead to more hiring, experts say."

The Cape May Police Department continues to investigate the incidents, and expect to issue additional warrants. The calls have been tracked and disseminated to numerous media outlets and law-enforcement agencies. The Cape May Police Detective Division investigates the thefts.

The subjects identified are Robert Weathers, Robert Sheehan have reported the issuance of two search warrants.

Kristen Kelleher

U.S. Coast Guard personnel recently stationed at Station Atlantic City. The station appears to receive between 50 and 60 distress calls from June through September, so members train year-round to be ready to answer the calls.

At the 70th anniversary commemorations of D-Day this past weekend, Kulkowitz was single out by President Barack Obama in the prepared remarks of President Barack Obama in the White House.

The president recounted the story of Harry Kulkowitz, a 20-year-old with the 114th Signal Company, seasick, twenty-first hour, Kulkowitz was welcomed with open arms by his friends in the fight, "Think of Harry Kulkowitz, the Jewish son of Russian immigrants, feared and, as he said, not frightend, but the humble hero and a true American hero."

Five suspects entered the store at about 4 p.m. May 8. According to Cape May police, "The Cape May City Police Detective Division investigates the thefts. The Cape May City Police Detective Division investigates the thefts. The Cape May City Police Detective Division investigates the thefts."

The station continues to investigate the incidents, and expect to issue additional warrants.