Ex-police Lt. Lear will seek election to mayor position

By JACK FICTER

CAPE MAY — What type of seat at a restaurant, hotel or shop would count as permissible and licenced seating and would not be considered a public place? This is a question the City Council is asked to determine as it considers a proposed ordinance that would make the regulations that apply to businesses in the business district more specific.

The question is primarily related to the definition of seat. The ordinance the council will consider at Monday’s meeting would provide a definition of “seating” based on the use of the seat, and would require the council to define the term “seat” for purposes of applying regulations to businesses.

The ordinance would also provide for the establishment of a uniformed disorder resolution, and would allow the mayor to declare a “state of emergency” if the council determines that an emergency exists.

The city council is currently considering whether to adopt the ordinance, which would allow it to impose a tax on the sale of alcoholic beverages.

The ordinance was introduced by Mayor Edward Mahaney, who said it would provide additional revenue for the city and help to ensure that the city’s business district is protected from crime.

The ordinance would also provide for the establishment of a public transportation system, and would allow the city to issue bonds to finance the project.

The city council is currently considering whether to adopt the ordinance, which would allow it to impose a tax on the sale of alcoholic beverages.

The ordinance would also provide for the establishment of a uniformed disorder resolution, and would allow the mayor to declare a “state of emergency” if the council determines that an emergency exists.

The ordinance would also provide for the establishment of a public transportation system, and would allow the city to issue bonds to finance the project.

The ordinance was introduced by Mayor Edward Mahaney, who said it would provide additional revenue for the city and help to ensure that the city’s business district is protected from crime.

The ordinance would also provide for the establishment of a uniformed disorder resolution, and would allow the mayor to declare a “state of emergency” if the council determines that an emergency exists.

The ordinance would also provide for the establishment of a public transportation system, and would allow the city to issue bonds to finance the project.

The ordinance was introduced by Mayor Edward Mahaney, who said it would provide additional revenue for the city and help to ensure that the city’s business district is protected from crime.

The ordinance would also provide for the establishment of a uniformed disorder resolution, and would allow the mayor to declare a “state of emergency” if the council determines that an emergency exists.

The ordinance would also provide for the establishment of a public transportation system, and would allow the city to issue bonds to finance the project.

The ordinance was introduced by Mayor Edward Mahaney, who said it would provide additional revenue for the city and help to ensure that the city’s business district is protected from crime.

The ordinance would also provide for the establishment of a uniformed disorder resolution, and would allow the mayor to declare a “state of emergency” if the council determines that an emergency exists.

The ordinance would also provide for the establishment of a public transportation system, and would allow the city to issue bonds to finance the project.