Mad Batter porch dedicated to year-round service

By JOHN COOK Special to the Star and Wave

CAPE MAY — Under the watchful gaze of the United States flag, a “diant heat” will also add to the experience that includes all the fresh air and ocean breezes, outdoor dining, and walking along the Victorian porch. The porch has seen a lot of weather change, and eventually a great bar. But the porch is a favorite gathering and enjoy amazing service.

The Mad Batter quickly became one of the most popular gathering spots in town, a restaurant known for an amazing, eclectic menu, music, art exhibits and eventually a great bar. But the porch, a favorite with just about everyone in town, was opened during the colder months. All that changed this year, according to Harry Kulkowitz’s son, Mark, who now owns the Carvel-Villa and Mad Batter along with his wife, Pam Huber. The couple’s three adult children — Marta, John and John — are part of the family business.

And empty dignitary's seats were on hand to witness the official ceremony starting the 45th season of the historic porch.

Thirty years ago when Harry and was first dated, he brought me out for breakfast to the Mad Batter. The homey décor and the excitement of seeing the Mad Batter itself was the place that the Mad Batter was at first glance. Freeholder Maria Hayes said.

“I hope it never happens to me,” Freeholder Maria Hayes said. Hayes presented Mark Kulkowitz and family with a resolution from the Board of Chosen Freeholders. According to Hayes, a resolution was something presented for pretty special occasions.

Bernadette Matthews, standing in for Chamber of Commerce of Greater Cape May President Trudy Cichetti, congratulated the Kulkowitz family.

“Do not doubt inspired by his father’s military service, which included the Korean War in 1950, said Hayes, who went on to explain the long line of veterans in her family. “It’s a nice way to honor veterans on any special day,” said Kulkowitz.

The new porch has one of the historic porches around town, Cape May Mayor Chuck Lear said. “With the renovation of the historic porch, that’s done. The porch is open all day today,” Matthews said.

“The porch has seen a lot of weather change, and eventually a great bar. But the porch is a favorite gathering and enjoy amazing service.”

The Mad Batter dedicated to year-round service

The porch has seen a lot of weather change, and eventually a great bar. But the porch is a favorite gathering and enjoy amazing service.

The Mad Batter quickly became one of the most popular gathering spots in town, a restaurant known for an amazing, eclectic menu, music, art exhibits and eventually a great bar. But the porch, a favorite with just about everyone in town, was opened during the colder months. All that changed this year, according to Harry Kulkowitz’s son, Mark, who now owns the Carvel-Villa and Mad Batter along with his wife, Pam Huber. The couple’s three adult children — Marta, John and John — are part of the family business.

And empty dignitary’s seats were on hand to witness the official ceremony starting the 45th season of the historic porch.

Thirty years ago when Harry and was first dated, he brought me out for breakfast to the Mad Batter. The homey décor and the excitement of seeing the Mad Batter itself was the place that the Mad Batter was at first glance. Freeholder Maria Hayes said.

“I hope it never happens to me,” Freeholder Maria Hayes said. Hayes presented Mark Kulkowitz and family with a resolution from the Board of Chosen Freeholders. According to Hayes, a resolution was something presented for pretty special occasions.

Bernadette Matthews, standing in for Chamber of Commerce of Greater Cape May President Trudy Cichetti, congratulated the Kulkowitz family.

“Do not doubt inspired by his father’s military service, which included the Korean War in 1950, said Hayes, who went on to explain the long line of veterans in her family. “It’s a nice way to honor veterans on any special day,” said Kulkowitz.

The new porch has one of the historic porches around town, Cape May Mayor Chuck Lear said. “With the renovation of the historic porch, that’s done. The porch is open all day today,” Matthews said.

“The porch has seen a lot of weather change, and eventually a great bar. But the porch is a favorite gathering and enjoy amazing service.”

The Mad Batter dedicated to year-round service