CAPE MAY — In the year 2050, the city will have a population of three-quarters of a million people and a lively economy that supports a diverse range of industries.

Beck said that he believes the city will continue to grow and thrive in the coming decades. He said that the city has a history of innovation and adaptation, and that it will be able to continue to do so in the future.

The city will continue to be a popular tourist destination, with visitors coming from all over the world to enjoy its natural beauty and cultural attractions.

The city will also continue to be a center for scientific research, with the famous Cape May Observatory and the nearby National Wildlife Refuge serving as important resources for scientists and educators.

The city will continue to be a hub for small businesses and industries, with a variety of companies located in the area, including the historic 18th-century hotel and the nearby grocery store.

Beck said that he is excited about the future of the city and that he is looking forward to seeing what the next generation of Cape Mayans will create and achieve.
