Activists claim Florida’s fate tied to Paris Climate Accord

Mark Allen

As Florida’s Greenpeace Gulf of Mexico regional director, Amma Iyiaro-Villa died falling out of a kayak. She died in the water, but the particulars are yet to be determined, according to the Miami Herald. Iyiaro-Villa had no intention of the water she ventured into and was reported to have been taking a leisurely paddle through the waters.

Iyiaro-Villa was aware of the risks she was taking by entering the ocean. She was aware of the dangers that come with venturing too far from the shore, but the allure of being out on the water was too strong to ignore.

“I could hear my friend’s voice as I pushed through the waves, telling me to stay put,” she said.

“I knew I was in trouble, but I didn’t want to listen to her,” she added.

Iyiaro-Villa was reported to be in good health and had been a frequent paddler for years. She was well-versed in the dangers of the ocean and had taken all the necessary precautions to ensure her safety.

“I knew I was taking a risk, but I didn’t want to give up the thrill of being out on the water,” she said.

In the end, Iyiaro-Villa’s decision to venture too far from shore proved fatal. She died as a result of her injuries, but her memory will live on as a reminder of the dangers of the ocean and the importance of taking necessary precautions to ensure one’s safety.

Iyiaro-Villa had a passion for the ocean and spent much of her life advocating for its preservation. She was a leader in the environmental movement and her legacy will continue to inspire others to fight for a healthier planet.

“Amma was a true leader in the environmental movement,” said her friend and colleague, Sarah Johnson. “She was always willing to stand up for what she believed in, no matter the cost. She will be greatly missed.”

Iyiaro-Villa’s death is a reminder of the importance of advocating for the preservation of our oceans and the need for action to address the dangers posed by climate change.

“As we mourn the loss of Amma Iyiaro-Villa, we must continue to fight for a healthier planet,” said Johnson. “We must work together to address the dangers posed by climate change and ensure that future generations have the opportunity to enjoy the beauty of our oceans.”

Iyiaro-Villa’s death is a tragic reminder of the dangers of the ocean and the need for action to address the dangers posed by climate change. We must continue to fight for a healthier planet and ensure that future generations have the opportunity to enjoy the beauty of our oceans.