the house, although for a moment you might believe there’s just a mirror at one side of the room, with the mirror reflecting the entire room with identical coverings.

In the third bedroom, the entrance leads you into a closet, the other to steps to the large attic. The current owners have left it open, but it could allow for additional storage, or even be used for a hidden game room, studio or craft room.

The house has a basement, where the HVAC, water heater and storage are stored, each on an elevated platform. The HVAC system is two years old, and the water heater is five years old. The house is so well-insulated, space is from it outside. Heating is natural gas as in the atroo. The house has city water and sewer.

The house is a classic Cape May design, without the gingerbread closely associated with the bed and breakfast inn but with the clean, functional design of the Victorian period, to which it was built. The original front porch by the tall trees lining the street and quiet enough to hear far from Cape May’s noisy downtown, but it is just really just down the road. Much closer are the courts of the Cape May Tennis Club and the downtown point in the Sea Isle City branch, providing for the work- shop but participants may bring their favorite dress or fresh-cut plants.
