

Mad Batter exhibits Papale and Heimenz oil paintings

Carol Heimenz and Victoria Papale are exhibiting new oil paintings at the Mad Batter Restaurant, 19 Jackson Street in Cape May. Both artists are long time members of the St. Barnabas Painters and have exhibited in distinguished galleries and museums both in the United States and abroad. The Mad Batter is open on weekends. Papale is also offering a six-week basic belly dance workshop beginning Monday, Feb. 4. at Artizans Salon, 600 Park Boulevard in West Cape May. Call 884-4499 to sign up while openings are still available.

manager for Lower Township Schools, and asked his recommendations for a kitchen for serving the annual Kiwanis Pancake Breakfast. Wichterman said every year the Kiwanis serve about 1,000 people. He said the organization would lose about $5,000 next year after Convention Hall is demolished in December. He said the Kiwanis donates $35,000 for college scholarships. He said Morris recommended all the kitchen equipment be on wheels with quick disconnects rather than hard wiring. He also recommended natural gas hookup rather than propane. Wichterman said the Kiwanis Club owns four 30-inch propane griddles the club would donate to the kitchen, which he said could be converted for natural gas. Jerry Gaffney, representing the Beach Theatre Foundation, said his organization is concerned the new design is too large and will compete with retail space around the Beach Theatre.

He said the new structure would be built with three or four times the square footage and not much difference in the seating capacity. Kimmel said they might be able to seat 1,200 to 1,300. Gaffney said the Beach Theatre Foundation has a large agenda and the clock is running on them finding a developer. "We look at this (Convention Hall) as an asset to the city, but it may be in competition with what we are doing," he said. Gaffney recommended rebuilding on the same footprint as the existing Convention Hall. Mary Ann Gaffney spoke on behalf of the Energy Commission and recommended utilizing green energy – solar panels, wind turbines – devices on the new structure. The commission made recommendations about using energy friendly lighting, ultra-low water use fixtures, and reusing the existing flooring material.

funds. She said it was the same basic information parents had been provided in a letter from Stosz. "The parents asked 'What are we supposed to do from here?'" Gehrke said. According to Gehrke, Stosz encouraged the parents to continue going to school board meetings and city council and express their concerns. Gehrke said the parents thought there was a conflict between what the Coast Guard was saying and what they were hearing from the school board, and they asked if someone from the Coast Guard could be present at the school board meeting, Thursday night. The parents were told the acting housing officer would attend the school board meeting, and according to Gehrke, they were surprised when Stosz showed up and made the announcement that the school bussing issue had been resolved. Gehrke said there had apparently been a lot of conversation between the school board and Coast Guard base on Thursday prior to the meeting. She said Stosz told them the result of the communication was that the school board drafted a letter saying the impact aid paid to the school for educating Coast Guard children doesn't cover the cost of bus service and asked the Coast Guard to provide the funds. The formal request by the school apparently paved the way for approval of the funding. Chief Petty Officer Veronica Bandrowsky, public information officer for the USCG Training Center, said the Coast Guard needed the school board to certify that federal impact funds not sufficient to cover the cost of bussing and the school district could not afford to provide it on their own. "They provided that declaration in writing, which gave us the go ahead to use operating funds to continue bus service for next year," Bandrowsky said. "The Coast Guard said, yes, it was now considered an appropriate use of funds," Gehrke said. "They got the suggestion to do that from Congressman LoBiondo's office." Gehrke credited the Coast Guard, school board, and the Congressman's office working together with an agreement being reached. She said, now, how long the service would be provided would be determined in the contract drawn up with school bus company. Gehrke said she is happy the matter has been resolved. "It's nice not to have to worry...nice to have the stress lifted, to know we will have a school bus pull up next year is a relief," she said. Gehrke said the Coast Guard made it clear there was never an unwillingness to pay for bus service, but it had to be done legally.
